Today
the connection between education and the world of work is
of primary
importance

Today
"industrial knowledge"
is threatened by the speed of technological change

NUOVE

Today
all technological innovations push
towards polarization
of existing skills

functions
with low
and very low
competence

top functions

A gap in skills of the technologies between these two extremes is being generated it is necessary to redesign new intermediate positions

A traditional offer of education and training often fails to capture the transformations of skills required by technological innovations.

The Higher Technical Institutes are a relevant valid response

The Higher Technical Institutes act to be as «a School for a Demand» able to intercept the training needs of the industrial system and transfer them into the effective training offer.

There are two characteristics distinguish ITS training:

The first is flexibility, every year we can restructure the training courses according to the demands of the companies with which the courses are designed and implemented;

The second is the teaching methodology, a methodology that goes beyond the training model based on disciplinary separations and alternations of educational and work experiences and is directed towards a model in which there is a continuous disciplinary and experiential integration.

At the end of the training, the companies find
the resources they need and the students find the job.

EVERYONE WINS
